I had a memory of my baby brother last night as I was crying and feeling the pain of his death. I thought I haven't felt this way since my grandma Bea passed away. I thought who did I call in my time of desperation? My brother! He came to the hospital and held me till I could walk and drove me home. While driving the rain stopped, the clouds formed a darkened heart that clearly broke and seperated, then the rain returned. He stayed with me for hours and we talked about how God was crying with us and how he felt our pain. I miss you already baby brother...

A memory came to me this morning as I sat with my coffee. I thought it might bring at least a little happiness to your heart. When Kaitlyn was a toddler, our apartment was right next door to Kenny and Karens. Which meant, of course, the three of us were always popping in and out of each others place at all hours. LOLWell, Kaitlyn used to have terrible night terrors then. She would huddle in a corner and scream. I couldn't calm her no matter what I tried. Kenny and Karen heard her screams from the other side of the wall and came over to see what happened. Kenny got down on his knee and rubbed her back and just spoke soothingly to her and she settled down. Next time it happened, I called for him and he did it again with the same result. Up until the time we moved, after a few times, when she would have a spell, within seconds he would just appear. No matter the time. I was be pretty shook up after really bad spells and he would grab a deck of cards and he would stay there, play cards and joke with me until I was calmed myself. Never complained about it, never ignored it. That is the Kenny I will keep in my hearts memory.

The are just a few memories I had with my dad. I wish I had more free time to spend with him, but truth be told, even when we lived right next to each other I never saw him as much as I wanted. I miss him and I will always remember the good times!! R.I.P daddy I love you! ❤️

The best childhood memories I have of Kenny are when he and his brother would come running out of the house to hug me. His sister, Rica, is my best friend and everytime I would come over to visit the family, Kenny would be the first one out of the door to come and greet me with a big smile and huge hug. All of us kids would climb trees, build forts and play charades together. Good times from a simpler life... Memories that will surely last a lifetime. You are loved and will be missed, Kenny! 💙
